- B. Change control procedures
- C. Development of policies, standards, procedures and guidelines
- D. Screening of personnel

Answer: A

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

Explanation:

Administrative controls are security mechanisms that are management's responsibility and referred to as

"soft" controls. These controls include the development and publication of policies, standards, procedures, and guidelines; the screening of personnel; security-awareness training; the monitoring of system activity; and change control procedures.

Logical access control mechanisms are not an example of administrative controls. They are an example of a "Logical control" also known as a "Technical control".

Incorrect Answers:

B: Screening of personnel is an example of an administrative control.

C: Development of policies, standards, procedures and guidelines is an example of an administrative control.

D: Change control procedures are an example of an administrative control.
