Explanation/Reference:

To find the solution to this answer, you'll need to use the present value formula which is $Present\ value = future\ value / (1+i)^n$, where i is the interest rate and n is the power of the number of time periods. In this instance, it's $$2,750,000 / (1.06)^4$ for the present value of $2,178,257.57. If the cost of the project is more than the present value, it's not a good investment for the organization.

D is incorrect. This is not a valid calculation of the present value formula.

B is incorrect. This is not a valid calculation of the present value formula.
